Lingering moisture will keep plenty of clouds across eastern sections of the region today with some light rain early. Skies will be partly cloudy elsewhere. It will become mostly clear tonight and Saturday except for low clouds and fog in coastal and valley areas south of point conception. Upper level ridging and offshore flow will bring much drier weather to the region Sunday through Monday with above normal daytime temperatures and gusty winds at times. A trough approaching the west coast will bring some cooling Tuesday through Thursday. There is a slight chance of rain in northern sections Tuesday night and Wednesday.

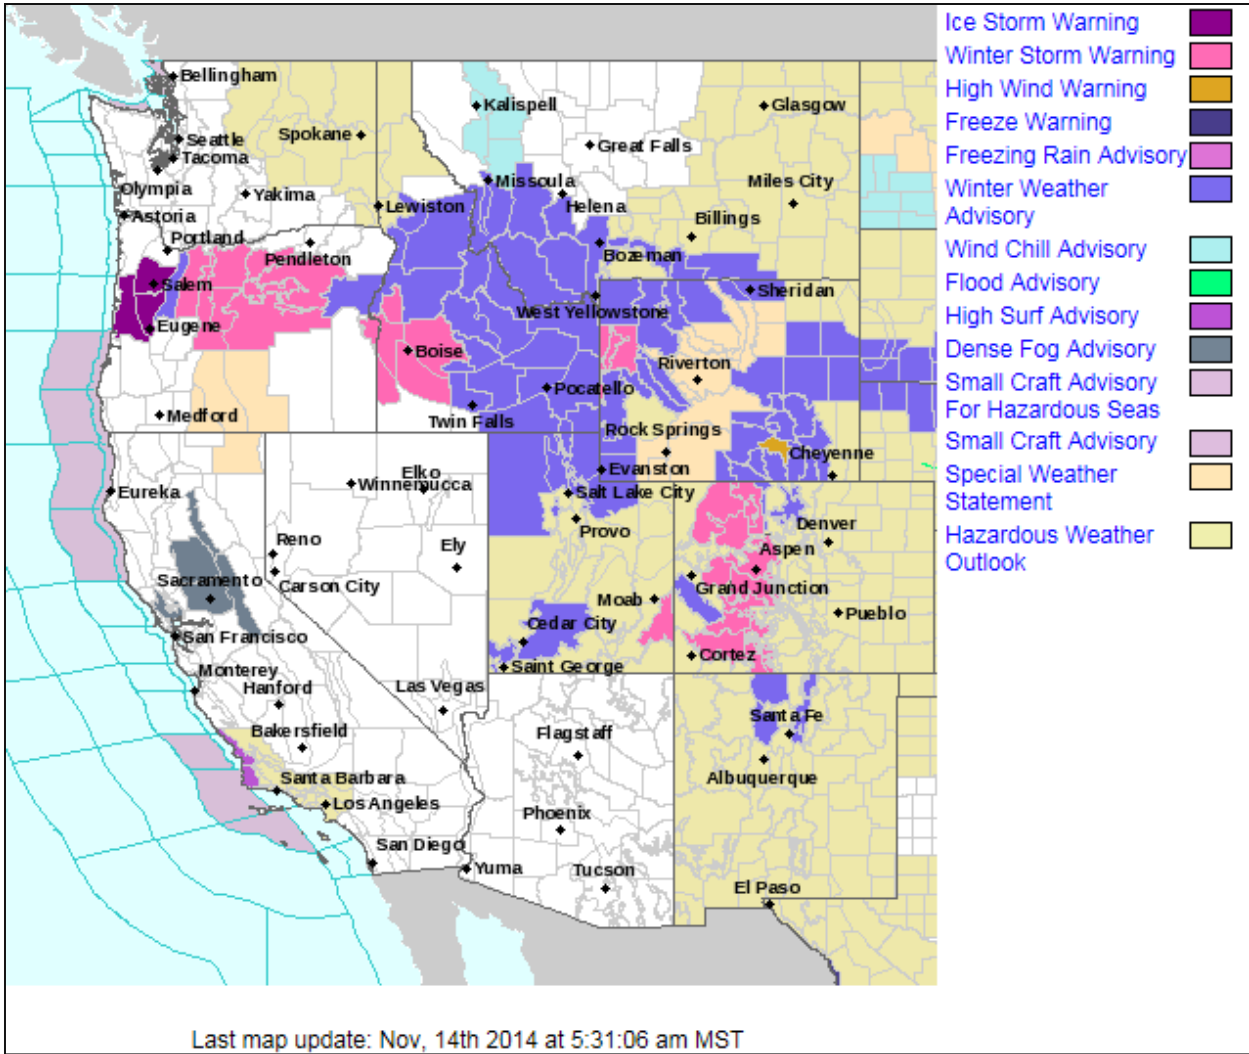

Extreme Southwestern California Including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

A weak trough of low pressure will bring some light showers into this morning along and west of the mountains. Otherwise onshore flow will continue through Saturday and bring partly to mostly cloudy skies west of the mountains and cooler days. Offshore flow will develop late Sunday and continue into Monday with gusty Northeast winds near the coastal mountain slopes and adjacent foothill areas. High pressure aloft off the west coast and offshore flow will bring warming through mid-week. For the latter half of next week onshore flow will return and slowly strengthen. This will bring slow cooling with a return of night and morning coastal low clouds and fog.

Southeast California Weather:

A weak low pressure system will bring an increase in clouds to the region today. A stronger storm system will move through the region Sunday bringing an increase in wind along with a slight chance of showers. Cooler and drier conditions are anticipated Monday behind a cold front.
